Professor Giang is amazing! Very underrated professor. Her classes are from 6:30-7:45 PM on Tuesday and Thursday because she works for the NYT throughout the day. She is one of the few professors at Stern who grades super nicely. Her weekly quizzes on Thursday are easy as one of the most underrated B&S professors. She's very caring and isn't as hard as a grader compared to most professors. Even though her class is very late (T/Th 6:30-7:45), it's because of her job at the NYT. Her class is very doable, even if you aren't the best writer.

Professor Giang is a great teacher. You have to be open to improving, but she does a great job at leaving detailed reviews of your essay, as well as discussing it with you. She also always has activities and interesting current events information to teach the class that relates to our topics which made the class a lot more engaging.

[UNDERRATED.] I looked forward to this class even though it was late in the evening. Her feedback was amazing and it helped me improve the grade of my papers each time although some comments said the opposite. Professor Giang genuinely cares about the student and what they learn, so if you put in the effort and participate you will be rewarded

Best. Feedbacks are concise and you can definitely earn good grades
if you just try to show improvements

I don't understand why people left negative comments. I think Professor Giang is one of the sweetest teachers I have met. I also think that the resources we used in class were very well researched and well thought of.

Completely uninspirational, discussions are pointless, grading is super based on individual student instead of overall work. Glad that I've finished this course.

Boring, uninspiring, weird grading criteria. I followed her advice on previous papers only to receive the same grade on the next. If you do unfortunately end up in this class (likely because the other classes will be full), then try your best to at least participate in the discussions.

Professor Giang is really nice! She really cares about her students and definitely knows her stuff. She can be a bit of a tough grader but gives you good feedback on the essays. However, not much is done in class to improve writing, and it just revolves around weekly discussions.

I was worried about taking this class, but Professor Giang made it a breeze. The weekly readings and journal assignments are pretty easy and interesting. The 3 papers make up a majority of your grade. I enjoyed this class a lot more than commerce and culture because this deals more with real-world

examples.

I had Professor Giang for two semesters, for commerce and culture and then business and society. She's very willing to work with you on your writing skills one on one and taking her classes my analytical skills have improved a lot. Theres a good amount of reading, but I found I could skim some of it and still participate in class. Doable work load.
